How

unjust is the allegation, these expressions of current opinion from Charleston and Raleigh sufficiently prove. The convictions in whch they originate are not confined to the Carolinas. Both in Tennessee and Missouri the subject of disfranchise ment, as the result of local law, engages increasing attention. In both, too, influential exponents of Republicans opinion are found on the side of liberality, and as Friends of a speedy amendment of the existing Franchise laws. Senator Fowler and a defeated Republican candidate for Congress are among the friends of a conciliatory policy in Tennessee; and even Gov. Brownlow is not averse to a par tial abatement of disfranchisement The discussion in Missouri has brought out similar expressions of
